History of the House of Lords
The House of Lords is an essential part of the UK Parliament. It checks and challenges the work of government and considers all legislation. Its long and eventful history has shaped the role, work and composition of today’s House.

11th century
Parliament originates in the Anglo-Saxon King’s council or Witan – a political body attended by religious leaders, magnates and the King’s ministers.

13th century
The Parliament of 1265 called by Simon de Montfort includes representatives from counties, cities and boroughs for the first time.

14th century
Two distinct Houses of Parliament emerge. Representatives from the towns and counties begin to meet separately as the House of Commons. Archbishops, bishops and certain abbots and priors (Lords Spiritual) and noblemen (Lords Temporal) form the House of Lords.

15th century
Lords Temporal attend the House of Lords on an almost entirely hereditary basis. ‘Peers’, as they became known, are accountable to each other and divide into five ranks: duke, marquess, earl, viscount and baron.

16th century
After the 1539 suppression of the monasteries, only bishops attend the House and the Lords Temporal form a majority for the first time.
From Civil War to Articles of Union of Scotland

17th century
In 1642, during the Civil War, bishops are excluded from the House of Lords but are returned by the Clergy Act 1661. In 1649, after the Civil War, the monarchy and the House of Lords are abolished. After the restoration of Charles II in 1660 the House is reinstated. The Commons pre-eminence in financial matters is further asserted by the passing of resolutions in 1671 and 1678. The Declaration of Rights establishes Parliament’s authority over the King and is later embodied in the 1689 Bill of Rights.

18th century
The Acts of Union with Scotland (1707) and Ireland (1800) create a single Parliament, first for Great Britain and then for the United Kingdom. The acts entitle Scottish and Irish Peers to elect representatives to sit in the Lords.

Queen Anne presides over the House of Lords as Scottish peers first sit in the chamber in 1707.
19th and 20th century

1851

The chamber after the number of bishops entitled to sit had been limited to 26 – it had been rebuilt by Barry and Pugin following the Great Fire of 1834.

19th century
The Bishopric of Manchester Act 1847 (and later acts) limits the number of bishops entitled to sit to 26. Retired bishops cannot sit or vote in the House. The Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876 enables the appointment of professional judges as Lords of Appeal in Ordinary (Law Lords) to assist the Lord Chancellor in hearing appeals from the Court of Appeal. They are, in effect, the first ‘life peers’.

20th century
1909 The House of Lords rejects the Liberal government’s budget. The government then introduces a bill to curb the power of the Lords to reject legislation approved by the Commons.

1911 The Parliament Act 1911 limits the powers of the House of Lords by stating that bills dealing with raising or spending money can become law if not passed without amendment by the Lords within one month. The Lords can no longer veto other Commons bills permanently but instead can only delay them for up to two years.
1922  Elections for Irish representative peers end.

1941  The Commons chamber is destroyed during World War II. The Lords gives up its chamber to the Commons and uses the Robing Room when it sits.

1963  Tony Benn uses the Peerage Act to disclaim his peerage in order to sit as an MP

1949  The Parliament Act 1949 reduces the delaying power under the 1911 Act to one year.

1958  The Life Peerages Act 1958 permits the creation of peerages for life. Around the same time allowances for ‘out-of-pocket’ expenses and the system of ‘leave of absence’ for members are introduced.

1963  The Peerage Act 1963 allows hereditary peeresses to be members of the House, hereditary peerages to be disclaimed for life and all Scottish peers to sit.

1968  The government abandons its Parliament (No.2) Bill which suggested a two-tier House composed of created members who could speak and vote and others who could speak but not vote.

1969  The House of Lords Act 1999 removes the right of hereditary peers to sit and vote in the House. During the passage of the legislation an amendment is accepted, enabling 90 hereditary peers, elected from among their own number, to remain until further reform is proposed.
21st century and reform

2005 The Constitutional Reform Act 2005 sets up the Supreme Court, separating the House’s judicial function from Parliament. It ends the Lord Chancellor’s combined role as head of the judiciary, a member of the executive and Speaker of the House of Lords.

2006 The House elects its first Lord Speaker

2009 The House’s judicial function is transferred to the new UK Supreme Court. Law Lords become the first justices of this final court of appeal.

2010 The coalition government publishes an agreement, stating that a group would be appointed to bring forward proposals for an elected House of Lords. The group, consisting of frontbench spokespeople from the three main political parties is to prepare a draft bill.

2011 The deputy prime minister publishes a draft bill on House of Lords reform. It sets out proposals for a House of Lords made up of 300 members (80 per cent elected and 20 per cent appointed). The draft bill is referred to a Joint Committee of both Houses.

2012 The Joint Committee’s report recommends an electoral mandate. The government introduces its Lords Reform Bill in June. It proposes the House be made up of 450 members (80 per cent elected and 20 per cent appointed). The bill secures a second reading in the House of Commons but is withdrawn in September amid government concerns about the time it might take to pass through the Commons.

2012 The government announces that it is dropping the bill on Lords reform. For the latest information see parliament.uk/lords
